About me

I'm an aspiring self-taught developer with a hunger to learn all things code. I was a chef that is making a career change into tech.

I am very hands-on when it comes to learning and always take my free time to learn to code. I also work well in a team and also a fast learner.

I came across the position posted by your team from a mutual friend, regarding an opening for consultant customer service position.

I have experience working with customers being in the hospitality industry, solving issues promptly and maintaining a strong customer relationship. I think i will be a valuable member of your team.

I found in customer service, the best way to approach situations is to be listening closely and addressing the customer's needs and following up with the customer to have guarantee customer satisfaction.

In my current job, I have been known to solve problems on the spot and handling customer's complaints in a professional manner. I aim to treat each customer in a way that brings out the values and beliefs the organisation has instilled in me.

I will provide a friendly, professional and informative customer service to individuals i deal with but also to solve problems proactively. I will prove my ability to be an asset by being punctual, reliable and organised.

I look forward to hearing from you.

Warm regards,

Nic Chia
